AN AMUSING WAGER.

How Two Gentlemen Assumed the Role of Street Organ Grinders.

On Saturday afternoon, while a number of gentlemen, seated in front of the Queen's Hotel, Toronto, were being entertained by two Italian organ grinders, some one bet $20 that no two of the gentlemen present would play the organ from York to Yonge streets, on King. The bet was instantly accepted by a young fashionable attache of the gas works and a Chicago commercial traveller. The Globe tells how they won it: Off they started for the corner of York and King streets, the Englishman pulling and the Chicago man pushing the machine, followed by the Italians and the crowd which formed along the way. The first stand was made at the Rossin House, entrance on King street, the long slim American, full of business, turning the handle and grinding out now a hymn and now a selection from "Dorothy," while the Englishman took up a collection. A big crowd gathered astonished to see two well-dressed gentlemen playing a barrel-organ. They got a big reception. Ten and five cent pieces poured into the Englishman's straw hat, nor were other donations wanting. One young lady placed a small bouquet of flowers on the organ, which was politely acknowledged by the tall American lifting his hat and taking a more vigorous grip of the organ handle. A gentleman in the crowd bought a cabbage and placed it alongside the bouquet. It was also politely acknowledged. About 500 people gathered and the fun was great. Slowly the machine was dragged eastward along King street, numerous halts being made. The young ladies who happened to be in a certain King street restaurant were canvassed and responded liberally with silver pieces. And then a big policeman came along and gazed at the two musicians, and then a thought struck him. He asked the tall man for his license and was referred to the Englishman. Explanations followed, and the big policeman, entering into the fun of the thing, allowed the procession to proceed. At last the corner of Yonge street was reached and the bet was won, the organ was handed over to its rightful owners, the cash receipts were counted, amounting to $6.75, and were also given the two delighted foreigners, and the winners of the bet, after being presented with two handsome bouquets, returned to the Queen's Hotel, very well pleased with their hour's fun.

Sugar for Naething.

Last Saturday Betty and me were oot getting oor provisions, and in ga'in alang a street in the Sooth side, Bettie grippit me by the arm, and, pointing tae a shop window, says: "Guid keep us, Jeems! d'ye see that? Sugar for naething!" "Eh! what's that?" I says, getting oot my specs. "That's extraornar; trade must be dull atweel when they've tae gie awa the goods for naething. My certy, it's a new gemm this. Puir bodies! hoo can they afford a' that gas and a big rent? Betty," I cries, "ye ken I've never gruged tae pay a fair price fər onything I buy; but when folk offer ye a thing for naething, I wid be staunin' in my ain licht if I didna tak' it. Gie me the basket, and I'll go in and get eight pun', and, after I come oot, ye can slip in and get anither eight pun'; it'll no look sae greedy like. Jist wait a wee." And in I goes. "I'll tak' eight pun' o' that sugar!" I says. "Certainly, sir." And in a jiffy I got the sugar in a paper poke, and, putting it in the basket, I shut doon the lid, and says, "I'm sure I'm vera much obleeged tae ye tae be sae kind tae me—me a perfect stranger. I really canna fin' words tae express my thanks. Sugar's no vera dear, but it's aye something; it maun be a sair loss tae you. Hooever, I must jist thank ye," and wi' that I made tae come oot.

"Hey," cries the lad at the back o' the counter, "ye've forgot tea! there's two pun' o' tea goes along wi' that!"

"Lod save us, tea!—tea, did ye say? Betty," I cries, "it's no only sugar they're giein awa', but tea. Great criftens, this bates all! Tea! Certainly I'll tak' the tea," an' I held up the lid o' the basket, an' he popped in a package o' tea, a'ready made up. I thocht it wis vera fortunate I had seen the shop before the unemployed got word o' it, or they wid hae haen it a' rookit oot afore I got near't.

"Is there naethin' else—coffee, or anything," I says.

"No!" he says, "it's jist the tea and sugar go the gither."

"Weel, I share we ocht tae be thankfu' for that same; altho', if there was a bit pun o' coffee I widna object. Weel, guid day tae ye! guid day!" and I cam' oot. Lod, he jumpit ower the coonter, and grippit me at the door, and shook me, and says he, "The money, sir."

"Money!" says I, perfectly dumbfoundered, "ye ne'er said there wis ony money; but it's no ower late yet! Hoo' much dae ye gie? Ye're a perfect angel in thae bad times. I hope the money is no spurious."

"Ye've tae gie me the money," he says. "Me!" I says; "money for what?" "For the tea," he says. "Did ye no' say it went alang wi' the sugar?" "Certainly." "And didna ye say ye gied the sugar for naethin'?" "Yes." "And what's the money for, then?" "For the tea," he says, getting angry. "Noo, look here," I says, pulling him intae a close oot o' the crood, "let us understaun' each either. Noo, jest listen! Betty, haud the basket a wee! Tae begin at the beginning, did ye no say ye gied sugar for naethin'?" "We do." "Weel, so faur, so good; ye gied me my sugar for naethin', and, when I wis coming oot, ye cried after me that ye gied tea alang wi' the sugar."

"But y're tae pay for the tea."

"Tut, tut! Will I hae tae begin again? Noo, look here, and pay attention! We'll tak' it backwards this time! Are ye listening? Didna ye ca' me back when I wis gaun oot weel enough pleased wi' the sugar, and no askin' for tea—didna ye cry me back and said ye gied tea alang wi' the sugar?"

"I did."

"Weel, and hadna ye gien me the sugar for naething?"

"Yes."

"Weel, and what hae ye tae say for yoursel', eh? It's no the worth o't, min' ye; but I am no man tae be made a fule o'; hoosever, there's my card—ye can summon me, but I'm thinking ye'll get the warst o't. Na, na! I wisna born yesterday. I thocht there wis some juckry-pockry aboot it. Come awa', Betty, here's oor caur;" and the crood "hoorahed," and the policeman threatened tae tak' him up for obstructin' the pavement, and we cam' awa'.—Glasgow Bailie.

EMPEROR FREDERICK'S LARYNX.

The German Doctors Wanted to Operate, But the Scotch Doctor Objected.

A Berlin cable says: Dr. Gerhardt, acting under the directions of the German doctors who attended the late Emperor Frederick, has drawn up a report stating that early in 1887 the German physicians pronounced the disease from which he was suffering to be of a cancerous nature. They decided to open the larynx, and preparations were made to perform the operation on May 20th, when Dr. Mackinzie saw Emperor Frederick and declared that the disease was not cancer, and opposed an operation. Dr. Mackenzie removed a portion of the growth, which Prof. Virchow examined, but there was no proof that the piece was taken from the actually affected part. Dr. Gerhardt examined Emperor Frederick's throat after the piece had been removed, and accused Dr. Mackenzie of removing a piece from the unaffected part of the throat instead of from the diseased part. Dr. Mackenzie replied that it was possible he had done so. The German doctors protested against Dr. Mackenzie's treatment throughout. Prof. Von Bergmann corroborates Dr. Gerhardt's statement, and gives the reason why he lost confidence in Dr. Mackenzie.

Dr. Bergmann, in his report on the case of Emperor Frederick, says that as early as May, 1887, he wanted to open the patient's larynx and excise the growth on the left vocal chord. A small operation promised the best results. Every such operation he had performed in Berlin all winter was successful. There was then no question of the total extirpation of the larynx. The operation would neither have endangered the life nor would it have destroyed the voice, although it would have left it hoarse. At the time Emperor Frederick said: "Dr. Bergmann, this tumor must be removed. If it cannot be done on the inside, cut from the outside." Everything was in readiness for the operation when the plan was vetoed by Dr. Mackenzie, who repeated that after a few weeks of his mild treatment the Emperor would recover his voice and be able to command the autumn military manœuvres. Dr. Bergmann censures Dr. Mackenzie for defective manipulation of the larynx, for affording no guarantee that he ever reached the growth, and for trying to shift the responsibility upon Prof. Virchow. He also blames Dr. Mackenzie for influencing the press through communications about his details of the Emperor's illness.

THE CHARGES AGAINST PARNELL.

He Wishes a Committee of the House of Commons to Investigate.

A London cable says: In the House of Commons yesterday Sir Wilfred Lawson, Home Ruler, asked whether the Government would grant the appointment of a committee of the House to inquire into the charges against the leaders of the National party in the House of Commons. W. H. Smith, the Government leader, said the House was incompetent to inquire into the charges. A proper inquiry could be obtained through the ordinary tribunals. Mr. Parnell later gave notice to the House that on Thursday he would submit a motion for the appointment of a committee to inquire into the authenticity of the letters published by the Times in its articles on "Parnellism and Crime," and those read at the recent trial of the suit of O'Donnell against the Times, in which he and other Nationalist members were charged with serious crimes. He would also ask the Government to appoint a day to discuss the subject and give him an opportunity to repel the foul and unfounded charges made against him by Attorney-General Webster in the trial of the suit of O'Donnell against the Times. Mr. Parnell's remarks were greeted with loud cheers from the Irish members.

Killed Before His Eyes.

A Montreal despatch says: News of a railway fatality of a peculiarly distressing character come from Jacques Cartier Junction, a short distance out of Montreal. The Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Railways meet at that point. On Saturday evening last the little daughter, some 9 years of age, of the C. P. R. depot agent there, was playing on the track, and by some means one of her feet became fastened in a "frog." Her cries brought her father to her assistance, but he could not extricate the foot at once, and meantime a train approached at a rapid pace in the near distance. The poor man made frantic efforts to tear his child from the rail in which her foot was so firmly locked, and also motioned the train to stop, but all was unavailing. He was compelled to relinquish the child or lose his own life, and the locomotive and tender passed over her, killing her instantly, crushing her head and the upper part of her body in a horrible manner immediately under his eyes.

That Earthquake.

KINGSTON, July 9.—The shock of earthquake last night at 11 p. m. was felt in this whole district.

Along the line of the Grand Trunk the shock was distinctly felt and unmistakeable. At Napanee the shock came first as if from an explosion, followed by a rumbling, rattling sound as the wave passed from north to south. Nearly the whole town was awakened.

At Enterprise and Tamworth the shock was so violent that goods were knocked out of shelves in stores. The shock was felt in Belleville, Picton and Deseronto. It seemed as if the wave travelled directly from north to south. The shock was plainly felt at North Port, Prince Edward County, and the residents thought there had been an explosion. The houses trembled and the people were much excited.

Daring Burglary at the Falls.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., July 7.—A very daring burglary was effected at the Wesley Park Hotel early this morning. The burglars effected an entrance into the hotel, it is supposed, by opening the front door by means of skeleton keys, and cleaned out two rooms of their valuables by fishing them through the transoms at the top of the doors. Rev. Nathaniel Sites, Chinese missionary, loses $26 in money and $100 in jewellery and clothes. Mr. Strawn, the proprietor of the hotel, loses $15 in money, $600 in notes, cheque for $83.77, and jewellery and clothes amounting to $100.

The Pan-Presbyterian Council.

A London cable says: At the Pan-Presbyterian Council yesterday Rev. Mr. Mathews, of Quebec, was elected permanent Secretary of the Alliance. Mr. Mathews' contribution to the work of the council was a paper on the statistics of the Church, and the manner in which he dealt with this subject showed that he was eminently well fitted for the position for which he has been chosen. The selection of a Canadian is appropriate also because the council is to meet in Toronto next. The council had an interesting and instructive discussion on the work of the Church in Europe.
